Musikraft on the other hand takes longer, has a harder to navigate website and order process, and takes way longer (and costs more), but the product reflects this. I also have two

My Musikraft neck was absolutely perfect out of the box. I took it to a luthier to do a setup once the guitar was put together (Warmoth body, Musikraft neck) and the frets were perfectly

Hi, While waiting for my new custom neck for about 9 weeks, I gathered as much information as I could about musikraft, even some scary ones about quality control being sloppy or

Thinking about ordering a Musikraft and sending it out to be scalloped. I built 5 guitars in the last 9 months or so. 3 Teles and 2 Strats. The necks are all from Warmoth. I ordered

Musikraft has tons of C Shape options, not to mention they will do a custom one. There's about 10 to choose from, not sure where you only saw 2. My favorite stock C they have is the

Musikraft didn't build enough relief into the neck, at rest, during the manufacturing process. This is accomplished during either glue up of the fretboard, if a two piece, or in final

Hi, I am thinking to buy a new neck for one of my basses - most likely a custom order. I am aware of Warmoth, USACG and Musikraft - I've checked out their sites, inventory and

I have a musikraft neck on my hwy 1 strat and that neck IS the best feeling neck I have EVER played! Its the fat c with a 12 rad and jumbo frets. It plays killer! I am waiting for 2 more

Musikraft has way more of the options that actually matter, and their fretwork is superior, IME. Warmoth has only a handful of neck profiles. Musikraft has dozens, if not scores. You

What say you and why? Also, one-piece vs. two-piece maple? What's the difference? Also also... Plain vs. quartersawn? Tonal differences or myth? Cheers!
